PRICE THREE CENTS

SAYS COUNTIANS HAVE 8 MILLION IN U.S. BONDS

Gift For McKenney From Scabbard, Blade
The Scabbard and Blade, national honorary military society at Gettysburg college, presented a silver identification bracelet to Col. Alfred E. McKinney, professor of military science and tactics at the college, in appreciation of his services and associations here during the past four years.

The presentation was made by Captain Joseph Vavald, commanding officer of the Scabbard and Blade, in Col. McKenney's office. Col. McKenney is completing his "tour of duty" at the college and expects to leave later this summer for an overseas post in the Army.

His remarks followed an address on the history and the meaning of the original Liberty Bell by Dr. Robert Fortenbaugh, head of the history department at Gettysburg college.

"No other state in the nation can start its replica of the Liberty Bell from Independence Hall; take it to Gettysburg and return it to Valley Forge," Mr. Webster said.

Made In France

"The fact that it was made in France is a happy circumstance," the speaker continued. "It was cast in an old foundry in Annecy which has been in the same family for ten generations. The foundry was the center of the marquis movement during the second World War. These people in France were particularly happy to cast the bell, because it was coming to America. In France they have no freedom but they knew that here in America we do. We of the savings bond drive, which opened May 15 and will conclude July 4, feel that the choice of the Liberty Bell as a symbol was a master move."

Mr. Webster said Adams county's quota was $119,430 in "E" bonds. "We feel that Adams county will meet its quota long before the Fourth of July," he said. Mr. Webster revealed that Adams countians own slightly more than $8,000,000 in "E," "F" and "G" bonds. "We are selling more E bonds now than at any time since the war," he added. "The number owned is at an all-time high peak."

Prays For Strength

The bell which visited Gettysburg Friday afternoon is one of 52 replicas of the original. It weighs more than 2,000 pounds and measures three feet from lip to crown.

Copper companies of the United States made possible the casting of the bell, in cooperation with the United States Steel corporation, Mr. Webster said. The truck on which it was mounted was furnished by the Ford Motor company and the gasoline supplied by the Standard Oil company of New Jersey.

The Friday afternoon program opened with 15 minutes of band music by the Gettysburg high school band. "Give us strength to maintain these liberties," Rev. Willis R. Doyle said in his invocation. Burgess William G. Weaver was master of ceremonies and the benediction was given by Rev. Fr. Anthony F. Kane, administrator of St. Francis Xavier church.

Commanders of three veteran organizations, John Zimmerman, United Spanish War Veterans; Paul H. Fox, Albert J. Lentz Post No. 202, American Legion, and Sebastian Hafer, Gettysburg Post No. 15, Veterans of Foreign Wars, rang the Liberty Bell following Mr. Webster's bond drive talk.

FARMERS' MART IS AFFECTED BY RAINY WEATHER

The Farmers' market today was feeling the effects of the continued rainy weather, but produce available was of excellent quality. Growers promised county-grown strawberries next week unless too much rain spoils them. There were no berries today.

Spinach, radishes, onions and lettuce were for sale on the market this morning at 10 cents a bunch for onions and radishes, and 10 cents a box for spinach and lettuce.

Rhubarb sold for 10 and 15 cents a bunch and asparagus was 35 cents a bunch, the price which has prevailed since it was first offered. Bundles of mint were 10 cents each.

Egg Prices Jump

Eggs were slightly stronger on today's market at 40 and 42 cents, an increase in most cases of two cents a dozen. Some large browns and mixed mediums were lower.

Flowers consisted mostly of iris, peonies and mock orange. The cut flowers sold mostly at five cents each or 50 cents a dozen. Sweet potato and other plants and perennials were also available at varying prices.

A few apples brought 40 and 50 cents a half peck. The price of chickens remained unchanged, with fryers selling at 60 cents a pound and roasters at 55 cents a pound mostly. Sliced ham was 90 cents a pound and bacon 60 cents a pound.

Whipping cream was 35 cents a pint; cottage cheese, 20 cents a pint; potato salad, 20 cents a pint; cup cheese, 35 cents a pint; bread, 20 cents a loaf; rolls, 20 cents a dozen; cakes, $1 up; pies, 40 and 50 cents and cookies, 25 cents a dozen.

YANKEES BALK "TOKYO MARCH" BY JAP "REDS"

Tokyo, June 3 (AP)—A Communist "March on Tokyo" stopped today. So did a Red-called general strike for all Japan. Both had been set to protest the trial of eight Japanese who attacked American soldiers Memorial Day. The eight were convicted this afternoon.

The Communist failure here was as complete as the Red threat last month to take Berlin. As in the old German capital, Japan's Reds refused to tackle police thoroughly alerted for any trouble. There wasn't a show of violence anywhere in Japan.

Japanese police pulled the rug out from under Communist plans by banning mass demonstrations outdoors. They couldn't use Tokyo's Imperial Plaza in Hibya Park, their favorite rallying places. Neither could they parade through the capital or past General MacArthur's occupation headquarters.

Occupation Is Target

The occupation was the announced target of Red wrath. The big blowout in Tokyo and the general strike were scheduled in retaliation for the arrest and quick trial of eight Japanese who stoned and roughed up five American soldiers.

The arrests grew out of Red demonstrations Memorial Day. They called a rally for the Imperial Plaza at the same time American troops were using it for memorial ceremonies. Japanese police prevented the Reds from using it. The Communists howled: "Suppression."

Later that day they rallied at Hibya Park. Four soldiers of the U. S. Counter Intelligence corps were assigned to observe. A signal corps photographer was there. They were attacked.

The eight Japanese subsequently arrested were charged with assault and disobeying occupation orders. An American military court this afternoon convicted all eight on the assault charges. One drew a double conviction for also disobeying the occupation.

Hold Indoor Rally

Kaneji Onishi, the double loser, was sentenced to ten years imprisonment at hard labor. Six of his fellows got seven years, another five. They were linked with attacking only three of the five Americans.

The only retaliatory show the Communists pulled off today was a union meeting that attracted about 5,000 persons. They skirted the police ban by holding it indoors. It opened and closed with the singing of the internationale, approved an open letter to MacArthur demanding release of the eight "patriots." There was no anti-occupation or anti-American talk.

THREE PERISH IN PRE-DAWN FIRE

Altoona, Pa., June 3 (AP)—A woman, a man and a boy burned to death today in a pre-dawn fire at Coupon in Cambria county. The victims were Mrs. Mary Phillips, 62, her son, John, 39, and her grandson, John, 16, a nephew of the older man.

They died in the roaring flames which destroyed the two-family frame house in which they lived.

The family of Frank Phillips, another son of the woman victim, escaped unburnt from the other half of the house. That family includes Phillips, his wife and five children.

The body of the Phillips boy was recovered, as well as one unidentified body. The second body so badly burned firemen could not tell if it was a man or a woman.

Firemen tramped through the smoking, charred ruins in a search for the third body.

The tiny community is about 40 miles from Johnstown and 15 miles from Altoona.

New Oxford

New Oxford—Rapid progress was made during the past week when men of the Immaculate Conception Catholic parish met at the Catholic cemetery east of town to work on the foundation of the grotto of Our Lady of Lourdes being erected there. Both schools closed Tuesday for the day in observance of Memorial Day. Borough graded and high schools also closed this week with commencement exercises May 31.

INDIANS FUSS IN KANSAS CITY

Kansas City, June 3 (AP)—Kansas City celebrated its 100th birthday today but after a whole century it was still having trouble with the Indians.

The great grandsons of the braves who harassed early settlers at the mouth of the Kaw were raising the dicens again. And right when the white city fathers were trying to concentrate on a long list of commemorative blowouts employing Hollywood talent, local actors and the expenditure of a lot of money and toil.

The Redmen are kicking up a ruckus about the tepees put up for them besides the skyscrapers in the heart of the downtown area.

The 54 Indians were invited to live in the tepees during the celebration to lend historical color to the event and to perform tribal dances daily.

It was bad enough, the Indians said, that a centennial eve rain had postponed their afternoon softball game. But when they repaired to the tents the white man had erected for them what happened? The rain seeped inside until their straw floor was a quagmire.

Drumbeats and war chants began rolling from the tents. Before long, the Indians sent their warriors out for a pow-wow with Paul Cain, in charge of the Indian village for the centennial committee.

Cain promised new, dry hay and other repairs. The Indians promised to smoke the pipe of peace if Cain comes through to give them all the comforts of their hometown tepees. It's an uneasy truce.

Exercises at the rostrum opened with "America." The invocation was given by Dr. Harvey D. Hoover, Lincoln's Gettysburg address was given by Dr. Seth Russell Downie. The memorial address by Governor James followed. Dr. N. B. S. Thomas pronounced the benediction and the exercises closed with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Blue and Gray band and the high school band.

Two Are Killed By Concrete Mixer

Pottsville, Pa., June 3 (P)—A concrete mixer truck plunged down a 150-foot slope, killing two engineers employed at the Auburn Desilting dam of the Schuylkill river cleanup project.

Killed were James Burns, Ventnor, N. J., and Eno Larson, Edinboro, Pa. Both were about 45.

Burns was chief resident engineer and Larson chief control engineer for the building of the $2,500,000 dam about six miles south of Pottsville.

State Policeman William Heinz said the mixing truck had been parked on the level, about 15 feet from where the men were standing on a slope. Heinz said the truck was driven by Ernest Artz, 22, of Pottsville, but he was not in it at the time it plunged down the embankment, hitting the two men.

The truck rolled the slope and smashed into the core of the dam.

MADE MISTAKE, JUDGE SAYS

Cincinnati, June 3 (P)—In the opinion of a common pleas judge, it's a mistake for any man to turn over his entire pay check to his wife. Judge Charles S. Ismael said he and Elsie Ismael, 51, were married in 1919 and until last August he had turned over his entire pay check to his wife.

MORAL ISSUES ARE INVOLVED IN CHINA VOTE

By SIGRID ARNE
(AP Foreign Affairs Analyst)
(For DeWitt MacKenzie)

This question of whether the 400,000 people of China will be represented in the United Nations by Communists or by the Nationalist government is going to cut a lot of different ways.

It looks now as if the decision may be taken this month in the U.N. Security Council. But it could be put off to the Assembly in September.

Whatever the date, here's the position the U.S. will take:

Will vote against seating the Chinese Communists. But it will not use the veto.

However, the U.S. will have to fight, inside the Security Council, for the kind of vote in which a veto cannot be used.

This is the first time the U.N. has been asked to decide this kind of issue.

China is granted a permanent seat, as a major power, on the United Nations Council. The issue to be decided now will be what group of political representatives her in the U.N.

On this ground the U.S. will ask the Security Council to consider the issue as merely a sort of family decision, inside the Council; as such, the vote would have to be only a majority vote—seven among eleven. No veto would be cast.

But there are plenty of people—including several senators—who are concerned by the moral issues involved on that sort of vote.

When the U.N. votes to take in new members a veto can be cast, and Russia has cast several. She has barred, so far, membership for Italy, Ireland and Switzerland, among others.

These three European nations are all governed by groups who were put into power by majority votes in the elections. On the other hand the Chinese Reds control their country by force of arms. Plenty of European governments have been willing to recognize such an accomplished fact.

Will Ask Explanation

But the U.S. has traditionally held off recognition until it felt convinced that a government was moving in the direction that most of the people wanted.

For example the U.S. still refuses to recognize that the Soviets have gobbed up the three Baltic states, Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia. All three still have diplomatic representatives in Washington.

So there will be demands in the Senate for an explanation from the State Department for their move in seeking a U.N. vote in which a veto cannot be cast.

Bonneauville

Bonneauville — Mrs. Mary Groft returned home recently after spending a week in New York City with her daughter, Mrs. Ann Groft.

Miss Anna Sneeringer, of Baltimore, spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sneeringer.

Mrs. Frank Marino, of Baltimore, returned home after spending the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Miller.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Zorback and son, of Baltimore, spent the week-end with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Orndorf.

Twenty-two boys and girls from St. Joseph's parish received their first Holy Communion on Sunday morning at the 7:30 mass. They were John Baadte, Samuel Chrissner, Wayne Chrissner, Michael Clabaugh, David Gebhart, John Kuhn, Eugene Kurkendall, Anthony Le-gore, Lawrence McMaster, Bernard Shanbrook, Gary Spangler, Larry Spangler, Richard Staub, Burnell Weaver, Lawrence Weaver, Theresa Keller, Mary Long, Theresa McMaster, Veronica Orndorf, Rosalie Sneeringer, Emma Staub and Catharine Zimmerman.

One Sunday evening the annual May procession was held in St. Joseph's church. All of the pupils in the grade school participated. Audrey Orndorf placed the crown on the Blessed Mother. She was assisted by the girls of the First communion class.

A short sermon and Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament by the pastor, the Rev. Father Leo Krichten, concluded the ceremony.

Ask Investigation Of Doctor's Case

Havertown, Pa., June 3 (AP)—Release of three men accused of beating a doctor and his wife has resulted in a demand by an official of the Chamber of Commerce of Havertown township for a full investigation by C. William Kraft, district attorney of Delaware county.

George H. Slagle, president of the Chamber, charged Thursday Justice of the Peace Roy Blackburn let the men go free and said in an appeal to Kraft:

"The people of this community are terrified to think that they are no longer safe within their own property lines."

Dr. Russell C. Smith, head of the anesthesiology department at Woman's hospital, Philadelphia, and his wife, Dorothy, say they were beaten last Saturday.

The years continue to prove that you can't keep gas consumption down by stepping on it.

Idle Car Breeds Trouble

Whether it burns the road in an honest effort to serve its owner or is stored with the idea of "sparing" it the automobile starts its tobgagan of depreciation from the moment it rolls off the assembly line.

Many observers believe that a car costs more when it isn't running, not only because it is then failing to yield dividends to its owner but also because it is subject to a wide variety of damage through idleness.

Parking is one of these. A long list of damages from the elements, other cars and handlers results from long periods of parking in the outdoors.

However, the U.S. will have to fight, inside the Security Council, for the kind of vote in which a veto cannot be used.

This is the first time the U.N.

has been asked to decide this kind of issue.

What's The Answer

On a friend's car there is a spring especially designed to help ease the job of decutching. It is not complicated but can be incorrectly attached. In its case such error resulted in keeping the clutch partially disengaged. The clutch slipped, the motor ran hot and there was much ado about nothing until a mechanic put his finger on the thing. If your car has such a helper spring and you suspect slippage due to its possible incorrect use, disconnect it and see if the clutch action then becomes normal.

If the output of the fuel pump is uneven the chances are that the return spring of the rocker arm of the pump is broken. This results in erratic action.

If you have been assuming the engine doesn't flood with gas when you have trouble starting, just because you don't smell raw fuel, you're just overlooking the fact that with downdraft carburetion the excess fuel runs down through the intake manifold into the cylinders. You have all the troubles of flooding, but without the smell.

Mechanic Joe Speaking

"Every now and again I run across a customer who draws his own conclusions from the trouble he has with the car and even makes out a case to prove that perhaps the trouble is in a blessing in disguise. A good example is the chap who believes that even though the automatic choke control on his car opens the choke too soon the lean mixture that results provides increased gas mileage. He doesn't mind the sputtering of the motor and figures he is trading a little inconvenience for savings. Actually, however, the overlean mixture burns so poorly the engine is forced to use more gas in the long run. The engine also becomes more inefficient, and that means further loss."

High Cost of Takeoff

One reason why some drivers succeed in getting so much more service from the treads of rear tires is merely because they do not frequently use the extra power of the modern motor. Acceleration, when used freely, will decrease tire life from 5 to 10 per cent, other things being equal. Every time you step on it for a flash getaway or indulge in a bit of zooming you are taking it out on the tires. You are also taking it out on the gas tank. It is fine to be able to accelerate when you need to, but for pleasure it is expensive business any way you look at it.

The drop in voltage at the battery ground strap should not be more than 2 volt.

When the brake pedal goes to the floor and indications are that there is leakage of air in the lines the chances are that the master cylinder's reservoir is empty.

Harsh braking sometimes is due to a loose backing plate on one of the brake assemblies.

Around the Map

The state of New Jersey learned some interesting facts when reviewing 5,251 drivers 65 years of age or older, not the least of which was the revoking of 23 per cent of the license because the drivers did not even show up for a checking.

For your own safety keep in mind that the automobile industry finds that about 6 out of every 10 brands of brake fluids are not up to S.A.E. minimum standards.

Plans for a new car would call for a rebate to buyers if the factory succeeded in producing and selling a certain number of cars.

A. This arcing is usually caused by not having sufficient brush tension. Perhaps the brush holder springs need replacing.

Mr. Russel will answer questions regarding the safe care and operation of your car. Just address him at 254 Fern street, West Hartford, Connecticut, and enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal reply. There is no charge.

Useful In Traveling

Traveling men will be interested in a new little convenience that saves delay and trouble when a letter or report has to be air-mailed back to the office. No longer will it be necessary to guess at the weight of a letter when about to post it, nor to look up the night clerk to find a letter scale. All the traveler does now is to reach into the glove compartment for a featherweight postal scale which is smaller than a fountain pen. The envelope with its contents is clipped to the scale and suspended in the air. The correct postage and weight up to four ounces are given accurately.

Anyone who thinks the modern automobile is much more simple than its earlier versions should check over the new list of services which an oil company is recommending that its dealers mention to their customers. A list prepared before the war ran to 48 topics. These ran the gamut from steering to carbon removal, and seemed to be quite complete. In the new list there will be nearly 90 topics for consideration. Among the newer ones are detailed front-end adjustments, attention to overdrive, lubrication of automatic transmissions, automatic choke adjustment and replacement of brake fluid.

What's The Answer

Q. I can get some water in a town where local motorists do not need to use distilled water for their car batteries. Would it be all right to store such water in tins? J. K. L.

A. Better use glass, rubber or earthenware receptacles.

Q. Since getting my car back into service again I seem to have trouble cranking. The battery has had to be recharged twice. I have increased cranking speed a little by using lighter oil, but this has not completely cured the situation. Wm. L. L.

A. I suspect that the gasoline in the tank of your car is stale from the long period of storage. Poor gas will take longer to fire and will thus run down the battery.

Q. What on earth would cause the ammeter pointer to show charge when I switch on the radio with the engine running? F. S.

A. This is quite normal. It just means that the battery is low and that increasing the drain by running the radio calls for a big step-up on charging rate. The current regulator takes care of this.

Q. There's a pronounced noise in the rear end of my car when pulling up hill and to some extent when accelerating on level ground. I am sure this isn't an exhaust condition. D. McB.

A. Check the mesh between the pinion and the ring gears. The pinion is meshed to deeply.

Q. What would cause the brakes of my car to drag. We have checked the clearances and they are current according to the service manual. I do not ride the brake pedal. L. L. H.

A. You'll find that the brake pedal doesn't return to its stop or fully off position. This can be due to binding of the pedal shaft or to weakness of the pedal return spring.

The brakes will tend to self-apply also if the pedal doesn't return far enough to allow the master cylinder's compensating port to clear.

Q. For some reason there is an excessive amount of rust in the cooling system of my car. Is there any special reason for this? H. G. K.

A. According to your letter you are from the Midwest.

Chapter 22

An increased activity along the platform warned them that the train was about to leave. Andrew saw Mr. Hamlyn aboard, and shook hands with Magda, who smiled an absent good-bye. She was watching William, still standing outside on the step, with a curiosity absorbed expression. Never in her whole life had she met anyone who could keep her on tenterhooks before. For the first time in her whole existence she had found someone wholly absorbing and desirable. William, charming or ardent, could send one's veins singing, and one's heart rocketing heavenward, but William indifferent was just about as indifferent as it was possible for a human being to be. He succumbed neither to threats nor to blandishments. She was happy only in his company, interested only when he was talking, amused only when he was gay and desperately miserable when he was indifferent.

Her father came into the little private drawing room at the rear of the big Pullman. He ordered some coffee and spread his newspapers on the table.

"What would you say, Daddy, if I wanted to marry William?" she asked.

"I doubt it," he said.

"The bantering, half serious smile vanished.

"What do you mean?"

He patted her gloved hand. "I mean that that's something," he jerked his thumb vaguely in William's direction, "that you haven't met before. That boy isn't in love with you, Magda. He's handsome enough and selfish enough to marry you if it will help him any. But you know this expression they have over here—He couldn't care less." Well, that sums it up."

"Don't be grumpy, darling," she said pleadingly.

He smiled, and gave her hand a little forgiving squeeze. "You try not to be foolish, this once. That's my girl."

The whistle shrilled and among waves and smiles and tears and farewells, the train slowly pulled out.

Andrew turned away to join Sydney, his hands in his raincoat pockets, his shoulders hunched against rain that was beginning to fall.

Andrew, following him back to the sleek car standing at the station entrance said, "The time has come, the Walrus said, to talk of many things."

"En?"

"Well, I think you should know—I want to go back to the States." "You want to what?" exploded Sydney.

"Hamlyn's offered me a job."

"Why, you double-crossing young—!"

"No, no," Andrew shook his head gently. "No need to use script language. There's no double-cross. I'm giving you a long term notice, but I want to go home."

He did not go down to Broadweir again that summer and heard little about it, for he and Morton never wrote to one another. Occasionally, at the production of a new play, there was a paragraph in the Sunday papers, and it gave him a warm feeling to find Katherine so regularly mentioned, and an absurd feeling of unjustified wrath if the criticism was not complimentary, or merely lightly unconstructive. It was all he wanted to know—that she was working, and that apparently Morton was giving her increasingly important parts. But, when he opened his morning newspaper one day in September and read that William Brody and Magda Hamlyn had been married the day before in Beverly Hills, he felt rather like a man who, after living all his life beside a dike, comes home to find his house washed away.

Even before the fact of what had happened had sunk into his mind, his hand was already reaching out to the telephone, and he had said, "Get me Morton at Broadweir—try the house, and if he isn't there, try the theater."

He did not know quite what he meant to do, nor what he thought he was doing. He only knew he was frightened. He could see Katherine opening that paper.

The telephone rang and he heard Morton's irritated voice. He said rather lamely, "Have you seen the morning papers?"

Morton, who never read anything but theater notices, bellowed back, "No. Why should I?"

"William Brody married the Hamlyn girl yesterday."

"Well, what's it got to do with me? He can marry the president so far as I'm concerned."

"Listen, L.M. I'm a bit worried. Do Katherine know?"

"How do I know?"

"I see there?"

"She's rehearsing now, and I'm busy."

"Can I speak with her?"

"Oh, yes," Morton said sweetly. "I'll go and get her. I'll keep the rehearsal waiting while you chat to her. Don't bother about me at all." Andrew heard him snarl, "Katherine! You're wanted on the phone!"

There was a silence, and then Katherine's soft, deep voice. "Hello."

He hesitated. "I was phoning L.M., and I just wanted to know how you are."

"I'm fine, thanks. I can't stop. We're rehearsing now, and L.M. is walking up and down like a mad bull."

Her little laugh reassured him. "I think I'll come up this weekend to see you."

There was a pause, and she said quickly, "If it's because of William, please don't worry. I'm quite all right, really."

He felt an overwhelming relief. "Stupid of me, but I thought perhaps you didn't know."

"Oh, yes, I saw the paper." "Well, when you come back to town, will you phone me? I'd like to have you come out with me some evening."

"Yes, perhaps I will. Thank you for telephoning. Good-bye."

That was all. She had made it quite plain that she did not want him or anyone.

Chapter 23

Chekhov's "The Seagull" was produced at Broadweir, and he read the notices, pleased that she had a spectacular personal success. He did nothing further until he had one or two inquiries from different managers about her. Apparently her name was beginning to creep around London. His time in England was getting short, so he rang Morton again, but the theater was closed for the winter, and Morton had gone over to Dublin to produce a play there, so he called up her aunt's home. Mrs. Best was extremely voluble, and very worried. Katherine had written saying she was going up north to stay with a friend, and she had decided not to return home. But she had given no address.

He looked up Heather's London address in the telephone book and went to see her.

"For one wild moment," said Heather, "I thought you had a part for me."

"If you can tell me where Kate is, I'll find you one, if it's the last thing I do," he assured her.

"You too?" she said. "What has that the rest of us haven't got?"

"Tee?"

"Oh, there was William, you know. He was really in love with her, in spite of this marriage stunt of his. She could have done something with William, if he'd stayed around long enough."

"You don't know where she is?" "Yes," she said slowly. "She came to London with me after we closed, and there was something so queer and white and exhausted about her that I didn't like to leave her, so when we got to London, I followed her."

"She didn't go home. I've tried that."

"No. She bought a ticket to Merseywell and caught the express up north. I didn't think anything more about it. I gathered that she had some job, or plan, or destination."

He rose, holding out his hand. "Thank you. I won't forget. It's something to go on, anyway."

Merseywell was a big city to start looking for an attractive girl with a pale face and rusty brown hair. When he arrived and checked into a hotel, he sat down and tried to work out a campaign plan. He had only one idea. Katherine would not be able to keep away from the theater. Even if he had a job of some sort and not much money, the chances were that once or twice a week she would go to the pit or gallery of a theater. His things were already packed, ready to sail, but he canceled his passage and settled into Merseywell to wait. Every night he went to the theater, watching the people going into the cheaper seats, but he heard her, answering when he spoke, like an obedient child.

It was evening when they drove up to Heather's. He had warned her by telephone from the London station. She came running down to meet them, her arms outstretched to help Katherine from the taxi. One glance at that white, thin, exhausted face brought a gleam of sheer fury to her black eyes.

"To feel like that because—oh, well." She shrugged helplessly. "I suppose that's why she's going to be a great actress one day, because she can feel."

Dr. Murray, Heather's mother, was upstairs. She took one look at Katherine and said briskly, "A warm bath and bed after that journey. Come along."

When he came back she said to Andrew briefly, "Complete nervous prostration, overwork—according to Heather, Morton worked her unmercifully the last months. And I should think she's barely eaten enough to live on since she heard about Brody."

"Would you—could you possibly—?"

"Look after her? Well, I'm a busy woman."

"I don't want to have her go to a hospital. I feel she needs people around her who really want her."

Dr. Murray smiled appreciatively. "You're quite a doctor, young man. That's exactly what she does want. She'll take a devil of a lot of convincing, though."

"Look, I'll be with her, Mother," said Heather seriously. "No, it's no sacrifice. I'm not working at the moment. You can watch her too, and Andrew will help. Oh, but aren't you going to New York?"

"I canceled my passage. I've booked one again for next month."

Mother and daughter exchanged glances.

"Ah, mphm," said Dr. Murray, the Scot suddenly coming to the surface. "You'll be thinkin' a lot about this young woman. All right, let's say. Well, nurse her here. I shouldn't come to see her too much. She doesn't want to have to face any emotional conflicts for some while yet."

Andrew rose and held out his hand gratefully. "She doesn't have to be with me," he said dryly. "Thank you very much. And thank you, Heather; you've been swell. I'll get you a part in London if I have to apply personal pressure to Sydney Blount."

"What do you think I'm doing all this for?" said Heather callously.

Andrew came to the door and said
